- Computing is a Life Skill

Damien Lonsdale. We are all familiar with the 4Cs in language learning: creativity, collaboration, critical thinking and communication skills. How about including a fifth 'C' for computing? This session aims at showing how students can learn English by taking advantage of the latest digital offerings, such as the Online Workbook.

- Competences: some integrated solutions to a seemingly complex area

Jonthan Coxall. We have been using the word competences in recent years to denote quite a number of general and language learning skills. It is a term that is used at both a formal and an informal level. This talk focuses on where we are in terms of competences and how we can easily integrate them into our language teaching.

- Using Global Solutions

Manuela Reguzzoni. We will explore the opportunities offered by 'Global Simulations', structured life-size collective creations which, by exploiting Co-operative Learning techniques and ICT, project students into stimulating learning environments capable of fostering learner autonomy, boosting motivation, making the acquisition of 'technical vocabulary' enjoyable and developing interactive skills.

- Exploring Life Skills

Steve Taylore-Knowles. What are life skills? How do we bring them into our classrooms? I'll explain how you can not only teach your students English, but help them to use their English to become more effective in their professional, academic and social lives.
